As a corporate associate, her practice consisted of mergers & acquisitions, corporate finance transactions and private equity investments. In her pro bono practice, she represented nonprofit organizations on general corporate and tax matters.

Tricia joined BCG because of its esteemed reputation in legal recruiting. Her reason for becoming a legal recruiter was simple. She wants to help attorneys find jobs. She has extensive knowledge of the New York legal market and knows that cultures vary widely among firms. She utilizes this knowledge to find the best match for each candidate and law firm, helping both to achieve their respective goals and agendas. As a former lateral candidate herself, Tricia is personally familiar with the excitement, fears and concerns that can accompany the lateral recruiting process. She has special experience with the issues surrounding relocation, having relocated to Washington, D.C., California and New York for career opportunities.

Throughout her career, Tricia has had an international practice. She is well-acquainted with firms around the world. She is very interested in working with both domestic attorneys who are interested in practicing outside of the United States and foreign attorneys who want to practice here in the United States.

City Chapter, a business networking group of almost 300 members. She is a founder of Fordham Tax Alumni, a group designed to increase relations between Fordham students and Fordham tax practitioner alumni. Tricia lives in Manhattan
