

Federal Judge and Professors Discuss the Legacy of Guantanamo Bay at New York Law School on 3/19

Who:

- The Honorable Judge Sterling Johnson, Jr., former Marine stationed at Guantanamo and the first judge to rule that the Constitution applies at Guantanamo (1993).
- Professor Brandt Goldstein, author of Storming the Court (Scribner paperback Dec. 2006), the true story of the law students and human rights lawyers who shut down the first Guantanamo detention camp in the early 1990s.
- Professor Ray Brescia, attorney at the Urban Justice Center and one of the law students profiled in Storming the Court.

What:

A panel discussion ranging from the remarkable true story of the lawsuit to free innocent Haitian refugees held at Guantanamo Bay in the early 1990s to the impact of that case on the current legal battle over Guantanamo to the role that law students play in our legal system. Join us for this timely and informative discussion. "Guantanamo remains a powerful symbol of injustice that not only hurts the United States' image but undermines international efforts to win the ideological war against global extremism." --Lord Goldsmith, Britain's attorney general, in The New York Times.

Storming the Court has been named one of the top ten nonfiction books of the year by Kirkus Reviews and is under development as a major motion picture by Warner Bros. "A gripping and psychologically insightful narrative...which combines constitutional drama, superb reporting, and shrewd insights from beginning to end." -- Jeffrey Rosen, legal affairs editor, The New Republic, and professor of law, George Washington University

Where: New York Law School, 47 Worth Street

When: March 19 from 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m.

RSVP: Please RSVP to LaToya Nelson at lnelson@nyls.edu or 212.431.2191.