

New Name for Yetter, Warden & Coleman LLP Reflects Firm's Momentum

HOUSTON, May 27, 2008 -- A year after welcoming partner Greg Coleman -- who served as the first Solicitor General of Texas after clerking on the U.S. Supreme Court and Fifth Circuit -- to lead Yetter & Warden's appellate practice, the firm has a new name: Yetter, Warden & Coleman LLP.

R. Paul Yetter, a founding partner of the firm, said, "Under Greg's leadership, Yetter, Warden & Coleman has assembled an outstanding team of litigators to handle high stakes appeals around the country. After a year of continued success in trial, arbitration, and appeals, the name change reflects our firm's momentum. The past several years have been especially busy and successful."

In just over a decade, YW&C has grown to 27 attorneys in the firm's Houston and Austin offices. The firm has collected more than $1 billion in judgments and settlements for clients, as well as defeated claims against them totaling in the billions of dollars.

Greg Coleman said, "We believe that the strength of our appellate practice further distinguishes us among litigation boutiques. Our clients can expect exceptional trial capabilities and appellate resources. Our recent results demonstrate the firm's commitment to providing thorough, aggressive, and creative advocacy and giving our clients top results at best value in every trial and appellate matter we handle."
